Plato Jesus has slaved for years in a variety of ostensibly educational institutions, endlessly enduring the indignities of the dulling environs that have produced today's lemming-like college student.

Having earned multiple degrees in an array of disciplines, he briefly served time at the United Nations and in non-governmental organizations before being sentenced to the debilitating embrace of academia. At present when he is not speaking to ghosts or listening to demons, he is analyzing political phenomena. His classic works include Logic, The Enlightenment, and Other Misunderstandings in Western Civilization; and, Hannah Arendt: The Swimsuit Sessions (edited volume). His current research considers the merits of jumping in front of the F-train.
